

Bylaws for your Organization

Bylaws are simply general rules governing a group. They should include the name and purpose of the group, description of members, terms of officer, dues, meetings, and a provision for amendments.

Having well thought out bylaws for your group can resolve controversy before it begins. By clearly spelling out the purpose of the group, the officers of the group, the form and frequency of elections and defining membership these rules offer important guidelines for a new organization. Following them provides a clear record of your organization's actions.
